Hi there, I'm Larry, I'm a 22 years old student from Italy.

I've discovered that I am attracted to girls from 6 to 15 a couple of years ago, and I looked for help but couldn't find any. The psychologists that visited me sent me to psychiatrists which gave me pills in order not to make me act badly against children, but I've never had the intent to do such a thing. When I see a little girl down the street the first thing I think is that I'd be the happiest man alive if I ever had the chance to have a daughter myself, that they are like fallen angels from the sky. But I also get aroused by them, and I'm terrified by this thought: the fact that I could be touching my own child terrifies me. It sounds like an excuse, I know. But I constantly feel this fight, and I don't want the dark part of me to come out as winner in this struggle. I know I can do that, and the greatest support I've been given in these ages has been the one of my girlfriend, who knows everything about this part of me. She is still here, and I want to go on, and have a daughter one day, without the fear of doing something very bad to her, something that no child deserves.
